“ I am grieving this world's, as well as my own, loss of one of the most truly special human beings I have ever been privileged to call my friend, Deborah Brandt.

I am heartbroken for her husband, sons, extended family, many friends and selfishly myself.

I say selfishly because I know she is in a place of grace, where she will never suffer pain, need or want again. For that I am so very thankful. However, I miss just knowing I could reach out to her and she'd be there. I know for a fact I am not alone in my feeling this way, for there are many, many others that called her friend, or that she touched in some small way during her lifetime.

I can picture her looking down on us now, awestruck because she had no idea that she meant that much to so very many people. Her quiet kind manner touched everyone she encountered, it was her essence.

Debbie was one of the very few people I always aspired to be more like. She always had a smile for everyone no matter how she was feeling or doing. I never ever heard her complain about anything. Her perspective was always positive. And I NEVER heard her utter an unkind remark about anyone. She was kind, and humble. She had a way of quietly soothing a person with her calm manner. She possessed so many admirable traits I can't possibly list.

I've never eulogized anyone before. However, I felt the need to on this occasion to let the rest of the world know that mankind has suffered this great loss. Even those that had not met her, because now they will never have the chance. But as I've said, she did touch many. And each was better for it.

RIP dear friend. I will forever aspire to achieve your attributes. Thank you for being YOU!

(I can here that distinct chuckle right now...)

“ I worked with Debbie for 2 years and considered her to be my friend as well. She was truly the definition of kindness and sweetness. She was a courageous woman and loved her sons and family with all of her heart. She could light up a room with her smile and it was a joy to know her. Rest in Peace sweet Debbie. I am sure she will be an incredible guardian angel!!!
